[REDACTED] It would also be necessary to increase the instructor staff and strengthen support activities. The DTR then stated that it would be preferable for CIA to train selected DIA personnel to be capable of training other DIA personnel, including replacement instructor personnel as necessary. CIA would also provide the DIA instructors with appropriate sanitized instructional material, and would participate in an exchange of materials on a continuing basis.

3. Additional agreements reached at the meeting cited above were as follows:

a. CIA's Operations Course provides more training in clandestine activity than would be needed by DIA students. Certain parts (not yet specified) of the course could, however, be incorporated in a course for DIA.

5. On 11 June 1962 [Redacted] again visited DTR, and discussed a proposed Department of Defense reply to Recommendation No. 13 of the Joint Study Group. The proposals to be made by [Redacted] would, if signed by [Redacted] be submitted through the Joint Chiefs to the Secretary of Defense. These proposals would recommend that CIA and the Department of Defense continue to train separately [Redacted]. Among the reasons for this position would be the difference in missions of the respective intelligence services, the difference in objectives, the need for compartmentation of students, and the expense [Redacted] to train approximately [Redacted] Department of Defense intelligence officers each year. The proposals by [Redacted] would, however, recommend exchange of instructors and training materials between CIA and the Department of Defense.
